

Need and Availability of Eldercare and Childcare

Our March question investigated the need and availability of eldercare and childcare for family businesses and their owners. The response in relationship to need of eldercare and childcare varied, but the response to availability did not. Roughly 31% of respondents had provided care to an adult in the past year, roughly 25% of respondents had a household member who provided care to an adult in the past year, and about 44% of respondents did not provide care. As for childcare, roughly 31% of respondents needed childcare, roughly 44% have children but did not require childcare, and a quarter of respondents do not have children (or do not have children of childcare age).

Most respondents stated that their community lacked an adequate supply of eldercare and childcare. Only 12% of respondents indicated an adequate supply of eldercare and childcare services, with roughly 63% of respondents indicating an inadequate supply and 25% not knowing about the supply (graph below).
