ABOUT THE COURSE

Wannamoisett Country Club is a classic Donald Ross design recently renovated by Golf Course Architect Andrew Green. This project was awarded “Best Renovation of 2023” by Golf Digest. The club hosted the 1931 PGA Championship and is the annual host of the Northeast Amateur Invitational. The Northeast Amateur is considered to be one of the top four amateur tournaments in the country featuring the top collegiate players from around the nation. Phase one of the master plan improvements included green expansions, reconstructing all tees and creating additional tees, replacing greens loop irrigation, and complete bunker renovation. There have been recent upgrades incorporated as well including bailouts around green complexes for extended playability options. Moving forward with the master plan there are opportunities for experience with the construction of cart paths, establishment of native areas, drainage projects and installation of stone work for course beautification. This master plan work along with day to day operations is made easy with new and well maintained equipment. The Club is ranked 53rd in the top 200 classical courses in America, per Golf week 2021.
