The Arthur Temple College of Forestry and Agriculture seeks candidates for a tenure-track assistant professor of forest resources management. This is a nine-month appointment with excellent opportunity for summer employment. The incumbent will teach undergraduate courses each fall and spring semester that relate to forest management and ecology. Teaching responsibilities include leading the team-taught capstone forest management planning course and a sophomore-level forest ecology course. Teaching responsibilities will also include undergraduate and graduate-level courses in the area of forest resources management. The incumbent is expected to develop a successful research program relating the management of forests and associated resources. Collaboration is critical for transdisciplinary work that addresses forest resources from multiple perspectives, including wildlife, human dimensions, forest recreation, timber, fire, watersheds, geospatial applications, urban forests, the wildland urban interface, and environmental resources. Obtaining extramural research funding, including an approved McIntire-Stennis project, mentoring graduate students, and publishing results in peer-reviewed journals are expected. The incumbent is also expected to collaborate with professionals and scientists outside the college. Outreach and service to the college, the university, the forestry profession, and the citizens of Texas are necessary.

The ideal candidate will have a Ph.D. in forest management, natural resources management, forest ecology, or a closely related field. The degree must be completed prior to the date of employment, but ABD candidates are encouraged to apply. At least one degree must be in forestry. Interests in the scholarship of teaching and learning, service-based learning, internships, technology-assisted teaching, and related innovative and/or experiential learning activities that enhance student learning are encouraged.
